Mrs. Robert E. Peary is now well on her way to the arctic regions, where she expects to find her busband awaiting her at Cape Sabine after his return from his latest and last attempt to that the pole. The Windward, which is once more in use as a rescue ship, was built in England nearly half a century ago, but is still sound. She is in command of Captain Samuel W. Bartiett, a veteran shipper who has taken the Windward in and out of the frozen sens on three previous trips. Since last March the vessel had been lying off Newburg, N. Y., getting ready for the arctic expedition.
